Routledge, 2012. Book Condition: New. Brand New, Unread Copy in Perfect Condition. A+ Customer Service! Summary: "Well researched and written in a style that is accessible to general readers, this volume is a solid addition to the human ecology literature. Summing Up: Highly recommended. All academic, general, and professional audiences." - K A. Reycraft, Florida Gulf Coast University, CHOICE "Our characteristics trace back to the forces that created the earliest simple organisms, and the physical features of our planet and other life forms have shaped the processes and traits that eventually produced modern human beings. But we biologists tend to be even more impressed by our utter dependence on the world that gave us evolutionary birth - on Nature, which nurtures us and to which we are tightly bound. When you've finished Human Dependence on Nature you'll be impressed too - and want to give a copy to everyone you know." - Professor Paul R. Ehrlich, President of the Center for Conservation Biology, Department of Biology, Stanford University, California "Endowed with unprecedented numbers, technological prowess, consumptive demand and a globalized economy, human beings are now undermining the very life support systems of Earth. The environmental movement has successfully raised concerns over issues like pesticides, acid rain, ozone depletion, toxic pollution, clear-cut logging and global warming, but has fundamentally failed in indicating that these problems are driven by deep underlying beliefs and values that shape the way we behave. A paradigm shift happens when we move from the centre of everything to being a creature embedded in and utterly dependent on Nature for our well being and survival. Haydn Washington's book provides the unassailable evidence that we are in an eco-crisis of our own making, making a strong case for an urgent need to change direction and seek ways to live...
